Republican members of the committee went after Hearno vigorously, while Senator John Sharp Williams, a Democrat, questioned Strauss sharply. The hearing was one of the most interesting held by the Finance Committee thus far and kept the committee in session until Hearne told the committee sewing machines could be manufac-tured cheaper in the United States Germany, England or notwithstanding that labor foreign countries is 40 per cent cheaper than in America. He de-clared that family sewing machines which are retailed in America for $45 cost only $9 to manufacture.

Tells of Singer Profits.

The Singer Sewing Machine Company and its profits were discussed by Hearne, who declared that the clared a stock dividend of $75,000,-000, had paid $440,000,000 in dividends to its stockholders and paying 12 per cent dividend on a capitalization of $100,000,000. Hearne was questioned closely as to the information upon which he based his claim that sewing machines can be manufactured cheaper in America than abroad. He said he based the statement upon his general knowledge of the business extending over a period of thirty years, and including ited the fact largely to the superior-ity of American workmanship due to ity of American workmanship due to the fact that American labor is more experienced and better equipped to manufacture sewing machines. He declared, moreover, that the very fact that America exports annually $5.

meeting foreign competition in home markets, was conclusively proof of his statement.

Straus told the committee that he

This may sound strange, but it is rue, nevertheless. In fact, it is the ery thing that has been expected. The Ice Trust is going to raise the price of ice 50 cents a ton, beginning the 1st of next month. This announcement was made yes-

The boost in the price of ice is made, presumably, to impress upon the public at once that if ice is especially plentiful this year, it is not its, the public's business, but simply the good luck of the Ice Trust.

MAKING SOCIALIST MISSIONARIES

Rochester University has finally rid itself of a professor whose activity in the advocacy of Socialism, the heads of that institution declare, has given the university some "undesirable advertising." In this action it has but followed the example of many other institutions declare, has given the university some "undesirable advertising." In the nineties, and unique this action it has but followed the example of many other institutions of learning, such as factories, mills, mines and workshops of vacious kinds.

As a growing political party, we Socialists have no particular objection to this policy, though it is rather hard on the individual who is subjected to it. Even if we did object, our objections would who is subjected to it. Even if we did object, our objections would complete the property of the sample component of the principles of movement pledged to the principles of movement pledged to the principles of movement pledged to the principles of movement. In the socialist party held in May, 1998, intender of the fact unionists believed in the labor of the form of organization. Nevertheless the party figidly and the industrial unionism had again definitely asserted that it has discussion, oratory, such as a rule, of any single work of the trade unionists believed in the industrial form of organization. Nevertheless the party figidly and a new dissension had arisen in the labor movement. It was no longer a point of the form of organization. Nevertheless the party figidly and the industrial unionism had again definitely asserted that it has discussion. Industrial unionism had again definitely asserted that it has discussion only of the trade unionists believed in the industrial form of organization. Nevertheless the party figidly and the union of the form of organization. Nevertheless the party figidly and a new dissension had arisen in the labor. Nevertheless the party figidly and a new dissension had arisen in the labor. Nevertheless the party figidly and a new dissension had arisen in the labor. Nevertheless the party figidly and a new dissension had arisen in the labor. Nevertheless the party figidly and a new dissension only of the trade unionism. Neverthele charged thinks that his activity has given it undesirable advertising, we know positively at the same time that such dismissal also means some very desirable advertising for Socialism.

No little part of the rapid spread of Socialist principles and conceptions is due to this very policy. Ninety-nine times out of a hundred the evicted one goes forth into the highways and byways and redoubles his "pernicious activity" in behalf of the cause for which he was cast forth. The discharged workman or professor is often for a time transformed into a wandering missionary, preaching the gospel of Socialism up and down the land, and attracting the attention of thousands who before had never heard of him or his troubles. In most cases the discharge merely means the opening of wider and larger fields for the activity of the undesirable one.

Even the idea of punishment which lies behind the discharge to repurliate the socialist Trade and the present socialist to organized labor:

The discharge dworkman or professor is attitude of Socialists toward labor ordential and finally the following paragraphs ment, Indeed, the present Socialist were adopted as a part of an address to organized labor:

does not work out as expected. The Socialist whose activity has attracted the notice of his employers, whether he be workman or university professor, is usually a thoroughly competent man in his occupation, with intelligence much above the average and of a determined temperament, as may be readily inferred from the fact that he was able to comprehend Socialism and courageous enough to risk his position by advocating it. He may be put to temporary inconvenience by the loss of his position, but not once in a hundred times is he cowed into silence because of it. There are not so many "repentant sinners" among such outcasts as to bring much joy into the capitalist heaven by returning thereto and promising submission to its decrees. He that loseth his place for the sake of Socialism shall find a better one, and he usually does.

The dicharge of a Socialist under such circumstances is not exactly equivalent to ordering him to get off the earth. It has about the same effect as an order of dissolution has upon a Trust.

But it is evident enough that we are approaching the end of this eriod of dispersal and dismissal, simply because in its working out t has largely negated itself by defeating its own purpose. There are even now industrial centers here and there where no employer would think of discharging an employe for Socialist activity, not because they love Socialists any more than before, but because there are too many of them, and that the discharge of one or a dozen would in all robability only mean hiring others of the same brand, while the first batch entered the missionary field temporarily.

There is safety as well as strength in numbers. Also the employer gets a necessary kindergarten lesson on the impossibility of driving everybody out of everywhere.

At first, if a man were even suspected of Socialist leanings and tendencies, it was thought desirable to dismiss him. If he were seen attending a Socialist meeting or was known to be in possession of Socialist literature, it was sufficient to cause his discharge. After a while this discipline was abandoned in such case and applied to the man who admitted himself to be a Socialist. In turn, too, this was abandoned, and the penalty of discharge applied only to those who openly and actively advocated the cause of Socialism in public. s is the stage we are in today, and this, top, will pass away.

And when it has departed, and it is reasonably safe to openly vow Socialism, there is another surprise in store for the employing classes in the appearance of vast numbers of workers in various positions, who for years have been Socialists without making public declaration of the fact. It has often been said that the Socialist party does not know where nine-tenths of its vote comes from, but for that matter neither do the employing classes. Some day, however, they will know, and perhaps may rise to the level of compre-hending the part they have played in spreading the hated doctrine while attempting its suppression by the exercise of their power of ism is not to be thought, because ownership as employers in depriving the Socialist agitator of his job.

The appropriators, instead of following the conventional method mployed in the region, of opening an office and waiting for victims, carried out the transaction on the street, thus saving rent and office xpenses. In lieu of stock tickers and advertising circulars they employed an automobile and some pistols and black-jacks as the instruments of appropriation. It was unconventional, of course, and not in harmony with the best traditions of the district, but it was nevertheless effective, and though it involved considerably more risk than the conventional method of getting something for nothing, on the other hand the transaction possessed the moral advantage of having been performed openly within sight of the public, rather than behind closed doors.

On the same day that this occurred, there were undoubtedly many other transactions in the same district, involving the ap propriation of many times $25,000 for which no equivalent was given, but as they were unaccompanied by any sensational features, they naturally attracted no particular attention either from the police or the public.

A few hours later on the same evening a somewhat similar incident occurred farther up town, when the police raided a luxurious gambling joint in the "Tenderloin." On this occasion they used gambling joint in the "Tenderloin." On this occasion they used almost the identical outfit employed by the raiders of the financial district, to wit, an automobile, and a supply of jacks, axes, crowbars and pistols. Several men in evening dress were among the victims of this raid, some of whom perhaps had a few hours before been gambling downtown in the financial district, where the unofficial raiders made their haul of $25,000. This episode, however, was much less sensational than the other, mainly because it was official and legal, which the downtown raid was not. And between the two transactions, besides this, there is very little difference. Both districts are more or less devoted to gambling, to the idea of getting something for nothing, but the one is protected and preserved by law from raiders, while the other is not—unless the gamblers can manage to secure, for a consideration, a somewhat precarious inmanage to secure, for a consideration, a somewhat precarious in-dividual protection from the Police Department or the local poli-

The morality or immorality of raiding a gambling joint seems to depend largely on the geographical location and the character of the raiders. Below the "deadline" separating the financial district from the remainder of the city, when performed by unofficial and unsuthorized parties, the act becomes in the highest degree immoral and anti-social, while farther north when carried out by official persons it is transformed into an action upon which the preservation of morality depends, even though in both cases physical violence is amployed. we congratulate our contemporary upon this exceedingly broad hint to Mr. Schiff.
